'It's obvious that we're not going to get the whole truth'

Brian Sinclair. Family of aboriginal man who died while waiting 34 hours in Winnipeg ER withdraws from inquest

The family of a man who died during a 34-hour wait in a hospital emergency room is pulling out of the next part of an inquest into his death.

Two aboriginal groups have also withdrawn. The groups and the family say they have lost confidence that the inquest will help fix what they say is systemic racism that played a role in Brian Sinclair's death.

"We came here for the truth, and it's obvious that we're not going to get the whole truth," Sinclair's cousin, Robert Sinclair, said Tuesday.

Brian Sinclair was a 45-year-old aboriginal double-amputee. The inquiry has heard he was a substance abuser and frequent visitor to the emergency room at Winnipeg's Health Sciences Centre. He died of a treatable bladder infection while waiting in the ER in September 2008.

Sinclair's family, along with the aboriginal groups, wanted the inquest to examine whether aboriginal people are treated differently by health-care workers. Provincial court Judge Tim Preston ruled last month his mandate was not that broad.

"It appears to the Sinclair family that Phase 2 will no longer allow the biases and attitudes that were at the root of Mr. Sinclair's death to be fully understood, and will instead entrench the marginalization of aboriginal voices," Sinclair family lawyer Murray Trachtenberg said Tuesday.

Sherbrook Pool to reopen in early 2016: City official

Supporters of Sherbrook Pool now have a re-opening date to plan a party for: January of 2016.

Barry Thorgrimson, Winnipeg's director of planning, property and development, said city engineers undertook an inspection of the mechanical and electrical aspects of the building, which was shut down in November 2012 due to safety concerns.

"Based on the complexity and the amount of work that needs to be done, we're hoping that we can get the facility up the beginning of 2016, January of 2016," he said, adding there is a slim chance it could open at the end of 2015. However, "we are leaning on the side of caution," he said. METRO

Icebreakers deployed. Province hires new chief flood forecaster

The Manitoba government has deployed their four Amphibex icebreaking machines — and have hired a new chief flood forecaster.

The four machines, used to break up ice on the rivers in the hope of avoiding ice jams and localized flooding, will begin work on areas of the Red River with a history of ice jamming, said Manitoba Premier Greg Selinger on Tuesday.

Selinger told a crowd of media that a new chief flood forecaster has been hired and will be introduced next week before the first flood outlook.

The new forecaster replaces Phillip Mutulu, who left after two years on the job.

He also said it's too early to predict flooding with any accuracy, but said soil moisture conditions before freezing were below normal.

$1.8M. Snow clearing puts Winnipeg in deficit

Blame that white stuff on our lawns, boulevards and streets for putting the City of Winnipeg $1.8 million in the red for 2013.

City officials told members of the finance committee on Tuesday that Winnipeg's snow-clearing budget went $15 million over the $31 million budgeted for the year. However, committee chair Coun. Russ Wyatt said the city's $1.8-million deficit would be covered by the stabilization reserve fund.

"The books are balanced, but … it demonstrates how tight the budget year was," said Wyatt, adding that snow is a big unknown in city budgets. "The question is whether or not we'll continue to get the snow we have had going into the future."

Wyatt said for 2014, they've budgeted $32 million, which is $1 million over what was earmarked for 2013. The city's snow-clearing policy has come under scrutiny after complaints about the windrows left in back lanes and front driveways.

New proposal delays daycare

Different daycare. City admin recommend selling site to another company

BERNICE PONTANILLA
bernice.pontanilla@metronews.ca

A new proposal for a daycare at the site of a former fire hall involved in last fall's audit has delayed a decision about its sale.

Gayle Waxman, executive director of the Rady Jewish Community Centre, shared details of a proposal for 1710 Grosvenor Ave. with the property and development committee.

"Our plan is to purchase the property and renovate the existing building to create a non-profit daycare that will serve 48 children and it'll be open to the entire community," said Waxman during Tuesday's meeting. "We are an experienced daycare provider and that's the reason for considering our proposal."

Waxman said Rady Centre already operates a 113-space daycare on their campus, and have secured $325,000 in capital funding from the provincial government towards the new daycare.

"Simply put, we've done our homework," added Waxman.

Currently, the city's administration is recommending another offer for the Grosvenor site — that it be sold to 6745394 Manitoba Ltd. for $429,000. The numbered company is also proposing a daycare site. After a short in-camera session within the meeting, committee members voted to delay a decision on the sale until Feb. 24.

Expropriation

The property and development committee approved commencing the expropriation process on the Shindico-owned 1780 Taylor Ave. that houses Fire Station No. 12, as well as the sale of the other two land-swap deal properties, $257,000 for the Berry Street property and $1 million for 409 Mulvey Ave. E.

Gayle Waxman of the Rady Jewish Community Centre said her organization would like to see a 48-space daycare at the site of the former fire hall on Grosvenor. BERNICE PONTANILLA/METRO

Police, protesters killed in clashes in Ukrainian capital

Kyiv. Officers in riot gear moved against main protest camp as anti-government faction fought back with rocks, bats and firebombs

Amid cries of "Glory to Ukraine!" and with flaming tires lighting up the night sky, thousands of riot police armed with stun grenades and water cannons attacked the protest camp in the centre of Kyiv on Tuesday, following a day of street battles that left 18 people dead and hundreds injured.

The violence was the deadliest in nearly three months of anti-government protests that have paralyzed Ukraine's capital in a struggle over the nation's identity.

As police dismantled some of the barricades on the perimeter of the square and tried to push away the protesters, they fought back with rocks, bats and firebombs.

Russian punk group Pussy Riot burst onto the Olympic scene Tuesday when two of its members were picked up by police in Sochi — and then ran away defiant down a rain-soaked street a few hours later, shouting and wearing their trademark balaclavas.

The police questioning of Russia's most recognizable punk rockers, along with detentions of activists in recent days, brought political tensions to the fore at Vladimir Putin's showcase Winter Olympics.

Nadezhda Tolokonnikova and Maria Alekhina, along with seven others, were held by police near Sochi's ferry terminal, a popular area for fans celebrating the Games. Police said they were questioned in connection with a theft at a hotel. No charges were filed.

"Putin will teach you how to love the motherland!" the women chanted on leaving the police station, their fists in the air and blue, pink and orange ski masks covering their faces.

Doctors were out of ideas to help five-year-old Charlotte Figi.

Suffering from a rare genetic disorder, she had as many as 300 grand mal seizures a week, used a wheelchair, went into repeated cardiac arrest and could barely speak.

Two years later, Charlotte is largely seizure-free and able to walk, talk and feed herself after taking oil infused with a special pot strain. Her recovery has inspired the name for the strain of marijuana she takes, bred not to make users high (Charlotte's Web), and an influx of families to Colorado.

Doctors warn there is no proof that Charlotte's Web is effective, or even safe.

In the frenzy to find it, there have been reports of bogus strains of Charlotte's Web. "We don't have any peer-reviewed, published literature to support it," said Dr. Larry Wolk, the state health department's chief medical officer.

The Ford show. Mayor offended when people call him homophobic

Toronto Mayor Rob Ford said in a YouTube video released Tuesday that he's offended by claims he's homophobic, while his city councillor brother suggested people in the gay community are "bullies."

The brothers made the comments in the second instalment of their online "Ford Nation" show, consisting of a series of clips of varying lengths in which they slag fellow councillors and take one question.

The query appears to have come via email from "Mary from Scarborough," who is identified as the mother of a gay son. She referenced Ford's stance against a rainbow flag at city hall and recent comments about not attending the annual pride parade.

Ford read the question, in which "Mary" suggested Ford is homophobic and asked why people should vote for him if he doesn't support all citizens. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Home brew program helps alcohol addicts

Vancouver. The Drug Users Resource Centre offers a program where severe alcoholics can make home brew

EMILY JACKSON
Metro in Vancouver

Instead of sitting back while illicit drinkers poison themselves with high-alcohol products like Listerine and hand sanitizer, a Vancouver nonprofit decided to help them get away from the products no human is meant to ingest.

The Portland Hotel Society — yes, the same folks that made headlines around the world last week for crack pipe vending machines — offers a program where severe alcoholics can make home brew at its Drug Users Resource Centre located across from Oppenheimer Park, a green space where some of the problem drinkers congregate during the day.

Called the "drinkers lounge," members in the year-old program must attend weekly meetings to be eligible to brew their own booze, said Mark Townsend of the PHS.

If people attend the meetings to discuss health, learn CPR and get help with treatment plans, they can then contribute $10 to buy a brew kit with four others.

"We want there to be a commitment to education and the group to be a positive influence," Townsend said. "We don't want to just randomly hand out stuff."

About 30 people are involved in brewing, with another 60 enrolled just for the meetings.

The Drug Users Resource Centre in the Downtown Eastside uses innovative ways to reduce harm, including a polka-dotted crack pipe vending machine that made headlines around the world. EMILY JACKSON/METRO

Outside of the club, the centre has a hydration team that goes out twice a day to places where illicit drinkers hang out to check on them, encourage them to drink water or juice and bring them back to the centre.

It's a pragmatic, self-funded initiative that helps a very small group of people (there's an estimated 200 illicit drinkers) who, if left on the streets to ingest substances like hairspray, often have negative interactions with police or end up in hospital, Townsend said.

Uncle's death pushed hijack pilot over edge?

Ethiopia. Hailemedhin Abera in emotional distress after sudden death of 'a very close' uncle, relative says

The Ethiopian pilot who hijacked a flight to Rome and took it to Geneva recently lost his uncle, a relative said Tuesday, suggesting anguish over the death may have left him on edge.

Alemu Asmamaw, another uncle, said the 31-year-old co-pilot Hailemedhin Abera used to call family members before his international trips, but had since stopped doing so and appeared to distance himself from his relatives.

He said the deceased uncle Emiru Seyoum taught at Ethiopia's Addis Ababa University. He did not say how Hailemedhin's uncle died.

An obituary for Emiru on the Addis Ababa University website only said the associate professor died suddenly on Jan. 1 while going from his home to the university. It gave no details about how he died.

Hailemedhin, who had worked for Ethiopian Airlines for five years, on Monday locked the pilot of a Rome-bound flight out of the cockpit and then as co-pilot diverted the plane to Geneva, where he used a rope to lower himself out of a window and then asked for political asylum.

The family was "extremely shocked" that Hailemedhin hijacked a plane, Alemu said, describing his nephew as "too proud of Ethiopian Airlines." He said the pilot was a devout Christian who "even used to ask his father to pray for him to return safe" from international flights.

After he was arrested by Swiss authorities, police said Hailemedhin told them he felt "threatened" in Ethiopia. Police did not specify why or by whom he claimed to feel threatened.

Manitoba Hydro – your energy expert

Improve indoor air quality with a
Heat Recovery Ventilator

Indoor air quality is important to your health, comfort, and sense of well-being. Good ventilation goes hand-in-hand with good indoor air quality, helping avoid problems such as excessive humidity, odours, and stuffiness.

When you improve the energy efficiency of your home by insulating your walls or attic, caulking and sealing gaps and cracks, or installing a high efficiency natural gas furnace, you will also make your home more air tight. An air-tight home saves energy, but you may have reduced ventilation enough to cause air quality problems. An energy efficient way to help maintain good indoor air quality through ventilation is to install a Heat Recovery Ventilator (HRV).

HRVs use fans to exhaust contaminants such as humidity, odours, and carbon dioxide from the home while drawing in fresh air from the outside. In winter, the HRV uses heat from the stale air it exhausts to warm up incoming cold air. That transfer of heat saves you energy and money while improving your indoor air quality. The air exchange also reduces condensation problems by replacing stale humid air with fresh, dry air from outside.

In summer, the HRV should only be used to exhaust odours and contaminants while drawing in fresh air for improved indoor air quality. During the summer HRVs do not reduce humidity in the house, because the outside air drawn in will generally have the same or higher level of humidity as the indoor air being expelled.

If you are planning a major energy efficiency renovation, consider installing an HRV for improved indoor air quality year-round. HRVs can be installed with an upgraded control that holds the HRV in standby mode (no low speed fan) or runs it intermittently (20 minutes an hour) while also turning it on if required by the de-humidistat or the bathroom controls. This control maximizes your energy savings to better match your lifestyle and comfort needs.

In 2011, The Manitoba Building Code was revised to require all new homes to have an HRV installed.

Check with a reputable ventilation contractor to see if an HRV is for you. Note that the purchase and installation of HRVs are eligible for financing under Manitoba Hydro's Power Smart® Residential Loan. For more information on the loan, visit hydro.mb.ca.

Stalking prey on the Savannah? Nope. Jagger the serval cat is on his daily outing in the Regina suburb where he lives. His owners say they're prepared to move out of province to keep their pet, if need be. ALYSSA MCDONALD/METRO IN REGINA

A killer in the family

Jagger the serval cat.
A Regina couple talks about their devotion to an African feline

ALYSSA MCDONALD
Metro in Regina

As Kim Shaheen takes his nightly walk around his suburban Regina neighbourhood, there are lots of smiles, some stares and a few questions.

And they are all focused on the African serval cat on a harness with Shaheen.

For many, the animal — the smallest out of the African cat family — is usually not the first thing that comes to mind when choosing a new pet.

But for Shaheen and his wife, Pam, a couple from Regina with three grown children, it was the perfect way to round out their family.

The 30-pound pet, named Jagger, has four litter boxes, regularly plays fetch in the park behind the house and sleeps in the same bed as the couple.

"It's like having a four-year-old that is never going to grow up," Shaheen told Metro from his living room in northeast Regina. "It's a pet that you get so close to because they are so dependant on you," added Pam.

Visit metronews.ca to watch a video of Jagger in action.

Jagger is so much a part of the family that when the couple found out in November 2012 — roughly seven months after they got the baby animal from a breeder in B.C. — that the province might not allow them to keep him, they started planning a move. "He's got no claws, he's never let out on his own (and) he's fixed so he is not going to change the environment, so I am not quite sure what the issue is," Pam said, adding that the city has no problem with the pet, just the province.

The pair say that serval cats get attached to their owners and once separated, the pet will go so far as to starve itself instead of living without its family. That's why, for the Shaheens, choosing to get Jagger was not a rash decision but rather a 20-year commitment — and even a letter from provincial government officials asking them to voluntarily remove Jagger from the province would not stand in their way.

"(He's) a family member. We can't give him up," said Shaheen, adding that the city was far more accommodating. It was easy to register their exotic cat. "We are his pride ... even when we are not here for a few days, he gets depressed."

"They bond with one family for life," said Pam.

So the couple has embraced living with their larger-than-life pet, taking him to schools and seniors homes for visits and watching him play with the family dog and cat. And not minding when he jumps up on the kitchen counters and costs them roughly $300 a month in "food and whatever he breaks."

Day 1: Exotic pets in Canada

After two New Brunswick boys were killed last year by an escaped African rock python, we wanted to understand why so many Canadians bring exotic — and sometimes lethal — animals into their homes and lives. What are the costs involved in caring for such critters? How many of these pets are illegal? And what happens when it all goes wrong?

- Thursday. Escape the clutch of a Burmese python and hear what the Ikea monkey's former owner has to say about having wild friends.
- Friday. Metro goes shopping for an opossum, and explains what to do when you have trouble with your pet fox.

Vern Ruml's 16-foot-long, 200-pound Burmese python named Abu poses with Ruml's girlfriend, Becky Girard. Abu was born in Ruml's home near Winnipeg in 1999. Ruml legally owns a dozen reptiles, and he's concerned about the welfare of animals that are smuggled into Canada. VERN RUML

Why do people buy exotic pets? Some say love, others say ego

Opposing camps. Folks on either side of the ownership debate weigh in on the point of it all

ALYSSA MCDONALD
Metro in Regina

When exotic pets make headlines, it's usually not for a good reason — generally, the story involves beasts who have escaped, have injured someone or been seized by officials as smugglers try to bring them into the country.

That can lead to a lot of head-shaking. Why, people wonder, does anyone want to obtain such creatures in the first place?

"I think for some people it's the challenge, but number one and foremost, it's for the love of the animal," said Scott Shoemaker, who acts as the director of Responsible Exotic Animal Ownership, a pro-position U.S. lobby group.

Shoemaker owns tigers, African cats and cougars, and said he does it because of the connections he's established with his pets.

"There are a lot of people who buy these animals and they love them," agreed Rob Laidlaw of Zoocheck, an organization that's on the other side of the exotic pet ownership debate. "They swear by what they are doing, are committed to it and defend it, and every once in a while someone gets killed by their pet."

Since exotic animals tend to be so much work, and some are potentially lethal, owners who are not dedicated to such pets tend to get rid of them, which can cause problems if the animals are simply let back into the wild.

Laidlaw said that a variety of influences, including television shows featuring odd creatures, can prompt people to obtain an unusual pet. "People do just buy animals on an impulse. They don't know what they are getting into," said Laidlaw. "They acquire the animal, get attached to the animal right away and end up keeping it." But he also maintains that some people want exotic pets because of the ego boost involved. "I always use the expression, 'Give a nobody a cougar on a leash, they become a somebody,'" he said.

But Shoemaker maintains that's not the reason people end up keeping such pets. "The commitment is 10 to 20 years, especially for a bigger cat. After the first couple of times it poops on your floor, it's no longer cool — it's some work," said Shoemaker.

"(People) may get into it because of that, but they don't stay in it because it's cool."

Quoted

❋ Buyer beware: Your scaly friend might not get into the country

There's the debate over whether exotic animals are safe to keep as pets — and then, there's the question of whether they're even legal to bring into Canada in the first place.

"We're seeing more traffic of exotic pets," Lyle Saigeon, executive director of the Saskatchewan Ministry of Environment's fish and wildlife branch, told Metro.

"The problem is that the exotic pet trade becomes kind of a global thing. And certainly, a lot of exotic animals are being brought into Saskatchewan, or other places in Canada, (through) online pet stores."

The continuing rapid increase in online pet sales has made purchasing animals foreign to Canada far easier than it used to be.

Saigeon points out that it's "kind of a buyer-beware thing" as to whether the would-be pet is legal to own in Canada, or in any particular province or city — and therefore, whether the snake, lizard, monkey or mongoose can even cross the border in a box or by some other means and reach the purchaser's property.

If the creature is endangered, he said, "the federal government would not let something like that into the country. But if it's coming across in a box, a lot of times it's not caught. And that's certainly the case for a lot of smaller animals."

Vern Ruml, who legally owns a dozen reptiles including a Burmese python, boa constrictors and an alligator snapping turtle at his home near Winnipeg, is concerned about transactions and transport of foreign animals.

"If they're not allowed, isn't the only way to get them here to smuggle them?" said Ruml, who operated the Ruml's Reptiles educational enterprise in Manitoba until about a decade ago.

"That shouldn't happen. If an animal isn't supposed to be somewhere, it shouldn't be there. Because ultimately, it's the animal that suffers. Not the person." ROSS ROMANIUK/METRO

❋ If you're uneasy about buying pets online, then you're better off going to a local pet store where it's more likely that the pets for sale are legal in a particular jurisdiction, advises Lyle Saigeon, executive director of the Saskatchewan Ministry of Environment's fish and wildlife branch.

So, where can't I own a wolverine?

The rules around exotic animal ownership in Canada are mostly a patchwork of provincial and municipal laws. Here are just some of the creatures you can't keep in various jurisdictions across the country.

This time it's not Putin doing the censoring in Sochi

Image control. The International Olympic Committee is strictly enforcing blackout of non-official sponsors

Want to see the glasses and goggles that aerials skier Lydia Lassila and snowboarder Lindsey Jacobellis wore at the Sochi Olympics? If you go to the website of the company that manufactures their eyewear, you might be in for a shock.

On the Australian section of Bolle.com, photos of Lassila, Jacobellis and other competitors at the Sochi Games have been digitally blurred to obscure their faces.

Open to change

During the Sochi Olympics, the athletes can't let their images be used for any commercial advertising. The blackout applies from nine days before the opening ceremony until three days after the closing — from Jan. 30 to Feb. 26.

This isn't a throwback to the days when Soviet propaganda chiefs airbrushed people out of photos. It's an extreme application of regulations meant to make sure that companies such as Bollé, which do not sponsor the Olympics, don't get to advertise off the back of them.

So the Olympics are a Pepsi-free zone, because Coca-Cola is an Olympic sponsor. In Sochi's Olympic Park, only Visa cards work for payments or in ATMs, again because Visa is a sponsor. At one Sochi venue, an Olympic worker even slapped a white sticker over the Dell logo on a journalist's laptop, because the computer manufacturer isn't an Olympic sponsor.

For Olympians, the dense and confusing thicket of rules severely restricting advertising is a serious issue.

In theory, Olympians could be disqualified if they use the games to plug non-approved brands. The International Olympic Committee even holds athletes responsible for how their sponsors behave outside the Olympic bubble. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Trade. Harper and Peña Nieto playing nice

Canada and Mexico have sealed an agreement to expand air travel between the two countries and renewed their vows to foster mutual economic growth.

Ministers formally signed the travel deal Tuesday under the watchful eye of Prime Minister Stephen Harper and Mexican President Enrique Peña Nieto.

The two countries also renewed their long-standing "joint action plan" to foster economic growth, security, immigration and trade.

Harper's meeting with Peña Nieto will serve as a warm-up of sorts for Wednesday, when they join U.S. President Barack Obama in a North American leaders' summit.

Earlier in the day, as he met with Mexican business leaders, Harper said Canada needs to do more to close its trade deficit with Mexico while attracting more investment from its southern neighbour.

While the 20-year-old North American Free Trade Agreement has fostered commercial growth between the two countries, there are still wrinkles to iron out, he suggested.

PUPPET MASTER PULLS HIS LAST STRING

JUST SAYIN'

Paul Sullivan
metronews.ca

Who's your favourite Muppet?

C'mon, I know you have one. Most people probably go with Miss Piggy, Kermit, Big Bird or Elmo.

Or maybe Bert & Ernie. There's an iconic New Yorker cover from the summer of Bert snuggling with Ernie, watching TV as the U.S. Supreme Court upholds gay marriage.

But I digress.

You can tell a lot about someone from his or her favourite Muppet. If you're a regular reader you're probably not surprised that I favour the wacky fringe Muppets (especially purple fringe), non-specific species such as Cookie Monster, Animal, Gonzo and the Swedish Chef.

And the Yeppers, multi-headed long-necked beasts that only say "Yep." The Yeppers get me every time.

But my favourite Muppet , hands down (pardon the puppet joke), is Sweetums. Sweetums is a nine-foot, hairy ogre with a big red nose and sharp teeth. Of course, like every Muppet, he's completely harmless, except if you're Kermit.

Sweetums is notorious for turning up whenever Kermit's around and announcing: "Sweetums eat frog now!" then giving chase. It's worth noting that in Muppetland, Kermit is still very much alive.

Which sadly, is not the case with Kermit and Sweetums' creator, Jim Henson, who died a tragic early death at 53 in 1990. Now his son John, a frequent Sweetums puppeteer and voice, has died of a heart attack at 48.

Jim Henson's death was particularly bizarre. He thought he had the flu, but very quickly became gravely ill and died of streptococcal toxic shock syndrome. Jim's wife and John's mother Jane died last year, suffering from cancer and paralysis, at 78.

John, who grew up in the family business, is remembered as an artist with an eye for detail, which he inherited from his dad.

It is a sad irony that this family who brought so much joy to the world has experienced so much suffering.

The family business will continue, but with John's death, I wonder if it will continue to be centred in the sly, generous satire that has elevated the Muppets beyond mere foolery. Like Fraggle Rock, which Henson produced in Toronto for a syndicate that included the CBC. Fraggle Rock was populated by a ridiculous sub-species called the Doozers: green, six-inch, dough-like creatures complete with hard hats who tirelessly and mindlessly erected structures that the Fraggles would absent-mindedly break off and snack on, which didn't faze the Doozers, as it kept them gainfully employed. A wonderfully wry and ridiculous commentary on relationships, mindful or otherwise.

The Muppets may be the only show with built-in critics, Statler and Waldorf, two irascible old grouches who sit in the balcony and carp amusingly about the proceedings.

So there's more to the Muppets than the letter A or the number 1. In fact even the number 1 comes with a purple vampire, Count van Count, who "loves to count."

I hope there's a heaven. Of course, if there isn't, the Hensons will just build it and populate it with the marvellous products of their remarkable imaginations. They're that good.

It's really not as high as it looks

What's this, London's under siege from savage-looking marauders? No, silly, it's just The Wall from the hit series Game of Thrones. HBO commissioned artists 3D Joe and Max to recreate the famed 480-kilometres-long and 215-metres-tall wall, in Bishop's Square, to celebrate the release of season three on DVD and Blu-ray. METRO

The Wall, protected by the Night's Watch, keeps the evil White Walkers at bay. Londoners are encouraged to "scale" the wall like character Jon Snow. Pompeii actioner latest flick to rake over the ancient ashes

Rebirth of Vesuvius. It's the volcanic mount that keeps on erupting, as Resident Evil director offers up his sword-and-sandal take

IN FOCUS
Richard Crouse
scene@metronews.ca

Paul W.S. Anderson's Pompeii burns with love as a slave-turned-gladiator tries to save his girl from eternal preservation. CONTRIBUTED

It's said the people of Pompeii regarded the eruption of Mt. Vesuvius in 79 A.D. with "a response more of curiosity than of alarm." The volcano had burped and belched as many as 50 times over the years, so most of the city's 20,000 citizens didn't pay attention when Vesuvius started to gurgle.

Perhaps they were too busy visiting one of the city's many brothels — like a proto-Las Vegas, this was the richest city of ancient times, ripe with amenities and vice — or enjoying their lunches of broad beans, olives, dormice (plumped up by chefs in terracotta jars) or even garum, made from the first blood of a still-gasping mackerel, to detect the cloud of deadly volcanic ash headed their way.

By the end of the day the dust "poured across the land," claiming 2,000 lives. Buried beneath, "a darkness… like the black of closed and unlighted rooms." The remains of Pompeii and its people were preserved, left untouched for two millennia.

Today the ancient city of Pompeii is one of the most popular attractions in Italy, drawing almost three million tourists annually. But if you can't make it to the Italian region of Campania, a new movie aims to recreate the experience for you.

Pompeii stars Kit Harington, Carrie-Anne Moss, Emily Browning and Kiefer Sutherland in a love story about a slave-turned-gladiator (Harington) who must rescue his beloved, Cassia (Browning), before a rolling mountain of lava and ash dooms her to the ages.

The big action adventure take on the story directed by Resident Evil helmer Paul W.S. Anderson has an ancestor in The Last Days of Pompeii, a 1913 silent sword-and-sandal movie based on the Sir Edward Bulwer-Lytton novel of the same name. That book has been remade eight times.

The most famous version came in 1959. The big budget CinemaScope production was to have been directed by Mario Bonnard, but when he fell ill on the first day of shooting, screenwriter Sergio Leone (who would go on to make classics like The Good, the Bad and the Ugly) stepped in. It's big on pageantry, just as the advertising taglines would suggest. It's a "Fiery Summit of Spectacle," the posters screamed, promising an inside look at, "the City that Lived in Sin and Died in Flame!"

Certainly it's more puffed-up than Up Pompeii, a 1971 Frankie Howerd comedy that featured a speech by emperor Ludicrus Sextus during Vesuvius' eruption.

"I say, Lurcio, how did my speech go?" he asks his servant as the city crumbles.

"Master, you brought the house down!"

Sending up the doom and gloom

"I say, Lurcio, how did my speech go?"

"Master, you brought the house down!"

Conversation between emperor and servant in the 1971 comedy Up Pompeii.

Sabrina the Teenage Witch star says she was wild at Hart, just never got caught

When she was a teen star, Melissa Joan Hart enjoyed a fairly squeaky-clean image, but now she admits it was just easier to hide things back then. "It wasn't that I wasn't a bad girl or that I was too much of a good girl, it was that I never got caught," the former Sabrina, the Teenage Witch star explains to Giuliana Rancic in an interview. For example? The night before her first photo shoot for Maxim magazine, Hart let her hair down in a big way. "You're in underwear, so I was feeling a little shy. I actually ended up rolling with some friends, doing ecstasy and going in a limo to my first Playboy Mansion party," she says. And she also admits that she found then-17-year-old co-star Ryan Reynolds a bit too hard to resist when they filmed the Sabrina, the Teenage Witch TV movie — especially after Reynolds gave her a Bulova watch as a wrap gift. "I chased him down, got in front of his car and just kissed him and then made out with him all night. Then I had to call my boyfriend the next day and explain it," she says.

Aniston says domo arigato but no arigato to Japan

Jennifer Aniston

Japanese fans of Jennifer Aniston are just going to make do with viewing their idol from afar, at least until the country does something about its dolphin-hunting practises, according to Radar Online. "Jen travels the world to promote her films, but there's a strong exception — and that's going to Japan," a source close to the actress says. "She doesn't allow herself to be contractually required to travel to Japan because of that country's policies toward fishing and specifically the treatment of dolphins. She has vowed not to go to Japan until the country's policies change."

Twilight star tired of playing fame game

Robert Pattinson

Looks like Shia LaBeouf has some company, as Twilight star Robert Pattinson "doesn't want to be famous anymore," a friend of the actor tells Radar Online. "The cost of fame is the thing he and (ex-girlfriend) Kristen (Stewart) used to complain about all day, that hasn't changed at all for him" since their split. So Pattinson "is looking at a whole new approach to his future and is even considering going to theatre school," the pal claims. "Rob's been talking to a lot of independent filmmakers, and the last thing he wants to do is act in another blockbuster. He would like to direct a movie one day." Because directors, of course, aren't famous.

Belgium thaws Madonna's Frozen

Madonna

Good news, Belgium! You can finally listen to Madonna's 1998 single Frozen again. The track was banned from being purchased or played in Belgium in November 2005 after Madonna lost a copyright infringement lawsuit brought by Belgian songwriter Acquaviva, who claimed the track used the intro to his 1979 song Ma Vie Fout L'camp without permission, according to the Bulletin. But a second lawsuit brought by composer Edouard Scotto Di Suoccio claiming that both Madonna and Acquaviva had actually ripped off his song Bloodnight prompted authorities to re-examine the case, and they've now determined that no sufficient plagiarism took place in either instance.

Look what the Cat dragged in: Ariana Grande to duet with Chris Brown

MELINDA TAUB
Metro World News

Today in terrible ideas: Pop starlet Ariana Grande is apparently recording a duet with dreadful human Chris Brown. The two teased their fans on Twitter with what appear to be lyrics from an upcoming collaboration:

"i dug a single seed into the ground, I hope it grows"
— Chris Brown (@chrisbrown) Feb. 16, 2014

"in a year or two if you're around, you'll see a rose"
— Ariana Grande (@Ariana-Grande) Feb. 16, 2014

After a fan inquired, Ariana confirmed that it's an upcoming song.

Why anyone would think this could be good for Ariana's career is beyond me. The star of Nickelodeon's Sam & Cat, who has such a squeaky clean image that she regularly wears a bow in her hair without a whiff of irony, should not be anywhere near Rihanna-battering human rage ball Chris Brown. Both for career reasons and for her personal safety.

On the bright side, judging by those lyrics, the song will be very bad, so at least I won't have to feel guilty about wanting to download it.

Stay on track on your Euro trip

Quick jaunt. By taking advantage of Europe's high-speed train system, you can cram in three great cities in less than a week

life@metronews.ca

With detailed planning and travelling by high-speed train, you can fit in the top sights in Madrid, Barcelona and Paris in less than one week — leaving you with vacation days for another holiday.

Day one

Check into the 19th-century-palace-turned-boutique-hotel Único Madrid, then get your retail fix right in this upscale neighbourhood, Salamanca. At the Museo del Prado, see works from Goya, Velázquez and Rembrandt, then next door, enjoy more than 30,000 plants and flowers at Real Jardín Botanico de Madrid. For dinner, walk from Unico to Oter Epicure (order the melt-in your-mouth Iberico ham).

Day two

Spend a quiet morning at the leafy Parque del Retiro. For a tapas lunch (pimientos de padron and tortilla, anyone?), hit up Mercado de San Miguel. Take the subway to Plaza de Toros de Las Ventas for a self-guided tour of this historic bullfighting ring. Snap some requisite photos in Plaza Mayor, the square at the centre of the city, then tour Palacio Real, where the grand decor and paintings from Giordano, Tiepolo and Velázquez will make you want to live like royalty.

Catch a sunset in Barcelona on your whirlwind tour. MOYAN BRENN/FLICKR

Day three

With your Eurail pass — which connects trains run by national train operators in 27 European countries — go to Atocha station, and take a moment to take in its stunning tropical garden. Hop on a high-speed train (some of which can travel as fast as 355 km/hr) and arrive two and a half hours later in Barcelona. Drop your bags at the modern Hotel Indigo.

Get your retail fix with shopping in Madrid. MOYAN BRENN/FLICKR

Stroll pedestrian boulevard La Rambla. When peckish, stop at La Boqueria market for warm mushroom salad and pulpo gallega. Fit in one Gaudi site — Parc Güell if it's nice out or Casa Batlló if the weather is inclement.

Day four

Head to La Sagrada Família early to beat the crowds at this unfinished Gaudi masterpiece. Afterwards, take the metro to Barceloneta. Grab a seafood lunch in this fisherman's quarter, then stroll down Passeig Joan de Borbó and kick back for the rest of the day at Platja de la Barceloneta.

Day five

Board a Paris-bound high-speed train with your Eurail pass and arrive six and a half hours later. Check into the conveniently located Millenium Hotel Paris Opéra. Grab a bite at Café Diane in the pretty Tuileries Garden, then with a list of your must-see pieces of art in hand, make a quick visit to the Louvre.

Day six

A quick stop by the Eiffel Tower is a must, non? Afterwards, if it's Wednesday or Sunday, pick up delicious provisions at nearby Marché du Pont de l'Alma. From here, take a Bateau Mouche ride for a fantastic view of the city. Next, walk the crooked narrow streets in Le Marais and stumble upon historic buildings, including the beautiful Place des Vosges. At night, a drink in the buzzy Saint-Germain-des-Près neighbourhood at Les Deux Magots or Café de Flore will complete your quickie trip.

Havana nods to its glitzy gangster past

The Capri Hotel has been restored to its former glory. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Capri Hotel. The place where Mafiosi rested their weary heads gets a facelift for tourists

In its heyday, Havana's Capri hotel and casino was the playground of men known as The Blade and The Fat Butcher. It was also a pleasure garden for headline stars who portrayed Mafiosi on the silver screen: George Raft, known for hoodlum roles such as Guino Rinaldo in 1932's Scarface, was the casino's celebrity "greeter" and made his home in the 19th-floor penthouse.

Havana's hedonistic mob-and-movie-star days came to an end with Fidel Castro's 1959 revolution, and the hotel drifted into a long, slow decline. But now the Capri is back in business after being closed more than a decade ago. Its rebirth is part of Cuba's latest bid to trade on its colourful pre-Communist past and attract tourist dollars to fund its socialist present.

"It's a feeling of that era (at the Capri). I think in Cuba you feel that in general," said Roberto Escalante, a 62-year-old Mexican university professor who was staying in the hotel this month during an academic conference. "It's very comfortable. It's missing some services still, but yes, you feel like you're back in those times — which were good!"

Indeed, details such as the Capri's polished, art-deco granite floors with their flowery bronze inlays fit right into a city that still teems with finned Chevrolet and Cadillac classics. So do the graceful copper-colored lobby chandeliers, which like the floors are restored originals.

The newly refurbished Capri reopened around New Year's as a partnership between state-run tourism company Grupo Caribe, which owns the hotel, and Spanish hotel chain NH Hoteles SA.

Universal Orlando. Theme park gets set to launch attractions guaranteed to make muggles happy

dean.lisk@metronews.ca

What's old is new — or at least re-imagined — again at Universal Orlando Resort in Florida. Many of the park's attractions are getting pop-culture injections and technological facelifts to keep up with visitors' expectations to be amazed, entertained and, of course, well fed.

Central to the park's changes is the recent unveiling of Diagon Alley, the secret London side street only accessible to the wizarding world in Harry Potter. Even muggles — humans without special powers, for anyone not familiar with the world of Potter — can soon shop where Hogwarts students purchase their school supplies.

Mark Woodbury, vice-president of Universal Creative, gave the Toronto Star and Metro Canada an exclusive Canadian sneak peek behind the closely guarded security fence of the still-under-construction attraction, which opens this summer.

Created by author J.K. Rowling, Diagon Alley is a hidden road in modern London open only to wizards. The tilting buildings in the alley are the setting of some of the most exciting scenes in the Potter series.

"When people come in they are going to have a first impression of something that is totally mind-boggling," said Woodbury.

Still emerging from the sand-covered ground, punctuated by scaffolding, concrete and wiring, is a scaled-down London, complete with Kings Cross and Charing Cross railway stations, Leicester Square and Wyndham's Theatre. Park guests will walk through one of the city's brick walls and into the magical alley — the details of how are a secret.

Inside the park, visitors will eat at the Leaky Cauldron, visit Ollivanders Wand Shop or buy a novelty item at the Weasleys' Wizard Wheezes. At the far end of the alley is the goblin-operated Gringotts Wizarding Bank; a large fire-breathing dragon will be perched on the roof of the building.

It will also be home to Universal Orlando's newest ride, Harry Potter and the Escape from Gringotts. "It really brings to life the movie," Woodbury said.

Diagon Alley is the second Harry Potter-related experience at Universal's Orlando parks. In 2010, it opened The Wizarding World of Harry Potter, located in Islands of Adventure, which welcomes visitors to Hogwarts castle and the Scottish mountain village of Hogsmeade.

Park guests will soon be shuttled between the two sites onboard the Hogwarts Express. Leaving King's Cross Station, the train will travel along an elevated track through the concrete buildings and paved roads of the anything-but-Potter-like Universal backlot before arriving at the gate of Hogsmeade. Information about the length, time and cost of the trip are as safely guarded as the recipe for butterbeer, a popular drink at The Wizarding World.

Woodbury said special technology, details of which were not part of the announcement, will make passengers think they are travelling through the hedged English countryside and rugged Scottish hills when they look out the train's windows. "Physically it is in the park, but the experience is truly in another place," he said. "It is a dramatic experience."

A spell of change is also being cast at The Wizarding World. Woodbury says Zonko's Joke Shop in Hogsmeade will be incorporated into the soon-to-open Weasleys' Wizard Wheezes in Diagon, giving room for the neighbouring Honeydukes — a sweet shop — to expand.

The Potter plans are just the latest in a series of updates to Universal's two parks. When it opened in 1999, the Amazing Adventures of Spider-Man broke new ground with dark-ride tricks and motion simulation. To keep a rider's Spidey sense tingling, it underwent a hi-def redo two years ago.

Over in Springfield (state unknown) U.S.A., resort chef Steven Jayson, who helped bring butterbeer to the masses, has developed a menu of food inspired by the Simpsons TV series. Park visitors can saddle up next to Barney at Moe's Tavern for a Flaming Moe or Duff beer or enjoy a burger at Krusty Burger. Chicken and waffles are a popular choice at Cleatus' Chicken Shack, while Lard Lad Donuts offers pie-sized doughnuts topped in pink icing.

A Cabana to call home. New resort a nostalgic riff on the family road trip

Fun for the whole family awaits at the Cabana Bay Beach Resort. CONTRIBUTED

Universal Orlando is recreating the classic family road trip with its newest hotel complex, the Cabana Bay Beach Resort. Located steps from the park, the design was inspired by mid-century hotels such as those in the Wildwood, N.J., historic resort district.

The property

The north end of the property is slated to open March 31, and features 600 rooms that are spread over three open-corridor buildings, each named after an iconic hotel: the Starlight, Castaway and Thunderbird.

The pool area

The three buildings surround a 10,000-square-foot pool, with a dive tower-inspired fountain, 17 cabanas and the Atomic Tonic pool bar. The south end of the hotel will feature 1,200 rooms in two seven-story towers with a similar-sized pool area between them

Entertainment

A ramp leads from the pool areas of both wings into the upper floor of the main building — avoiding the lobby altogether — where guests will find a fitness centre, games room, bowling alley and cafeteria-style eating at Bayliner Diner.

Family friendly

The rooms are designed with families in mind. A sliding wall separates the two-bed sleeping area from a small sitting area, complete with a queen size pullout. The bathroom is separated into a toilet, shower and sink area, so multiple family members can get ready at once. The suites also come with a small kitchenette with microwave and fridge.

Cabana Bay Beach Resort will open this summer. A standard room will rent for roughly $119 US a night, and the suites for $174 US.

The Mangroves at San Blas, Mexico

Once a prominent Pacific port, this small fishing town of 10,000 between Mazatlan and Puerto Vallarta is home to 30 km of beaches, winding estuaries, mangrove swamps and one of the most important natural bird shelters in the Western Hemisphere. In La Tovara National Park, you can find more than 300 different species of birds — pelicans, terns, egrets, blue heron, the works — not to mention ocelots and quite a few crocodiles. A boat tour through the watery maze of vegetation and wildlife will remind you of every prison escape movie ever made. San Blas is also home to the Riviera Nayarit region's unsung hero of Mexican cuisine, chef Betty Vázquez from El Delfin Restaurant.

Mom, dad, meet my new career

Labour of love. Five steps to giving your heart away to that sweet profession

SHANNON MANDEL
TalentEgg.ca

There is no such thing as perfection — in a job or a mate. If you continue to seek it, you will never be satisfied.
ISTOCK

Finding a job is a lot like finding a romantic partner. It's often challenging to find someone you'll be happy with, much like it's challenging to find a satisfying job. Conveniently, the same methods can be effective in helping you achieve both. Here's a list of five steps to help you find true love — in a partner or a job.

Turn to your friends and family

"I know a guy/girl who would be great for you. What do you say, will you let me set you two up? Come on, you know you want to."

Sometimes, your friends and family know you even better than your know yourself. It may be a good idea to seriously consider their suggestions.

They may know someone who would really jive with your sense of humour. Or they may have insight into a job that would really highlight your skills, even if you yourself are not aware that you possess those skills.

Before your friends can let you know about a job or dating opportunity, they need to know that you're looking, so be sure to let your social network know that you're on the lookout for a new job.

Know the difference between love and lust

Lust is finding a prospective date on a website, and falling for their pictures without much regard for their profile. Lust is also being attracted to a job posting with a fancy title, without giving much consideration to the job description.

Looks aren't everything. If you stick to the surface, don't be surprised if it turns out that the date or job wasn't the greatest match for you.

Do you share any common interests with your date? Are you excited about a company's culture and values? These are the factors that count. Dig deep to find out if you're compatible.

Perfection isn't all it's cracked up to be

"I'm really picky."

Everyone has deal-breakers, traits or factors that they simply can not be happy with. You shouldn't settle, but if you're too picky, you might end up passing up great opportunities. Flexibility is an important part of all healthy relationships and job searches. If you think you've found perfection, you're in for a rude awakening someday.

Make a list of your deal-breakers, and give careful thought as to why they are on that list. Though your list will be highly individual, it's a good idea to share it with a trusted friend. Discussing and reflecting might lead you to realize that some things are not as important to you as you initially thought.

Don't put all your eggs in one basket; diversify your search

You're never going to find your soulmate if you keep looking in the same bar week after week.

You might find him or her there, but you increase your chances of finding a better match sooner if you look in several different places. There are many ways to find your soulmate: through a friend, at an event, on a dating website, or through social media are among the most popular. Likewise, friends, networking events, career websites such as TalentEgg.ca and social media conversations are all effective ways of securing a job you'll love.

When you're conducting searches, be both broad and specific. Consider becoming active on mainstream dating websites as well as sites for groups that you consider yourself a part of. Look for jobs on general job search websites and those targeted to your desired career. Of course, don't forget to frequently check TalentEgg.ca for student and recent grad opportunities.

Let love grow

What if you've found a partner or job, but you're not sure that they're the "one" for you?

- Sometimes, "like" can grow into "love." Take your time before concluding that a romantic partner or job isn't right for you. Before throwing in the towel, communicate with your partner or employer — express what you need from them to feel more fulfilled. Do you need more support? More challenges? They just might listen to you and work with your needs. Now that's a sure sign of a relationship worth saving.
- Finding a job you love, like finding a partner, involves effort and planning. Enlist your friends, dig deep to discover true compatibility, be flexible, leave no stone unturned and put in an effort to turn "like" into "love."

As a secret shopper you can make up to $10-25 per job for your time and even get free snacks, meals or movie tickets while you're at it. ISTOCK

Let's face it — as a student, it's easy to feel broke. Between paying for tuition, textbooks, transit, rent and meals, there is often not much left for other things like entertainment and some good old fun. Many students hold the usual part-time jobs, but even that may not be earning you as much money as you'd like.

Here are some easy and quick ways that students can make some extra money.

If you can find some time in your busy schedule as a student and be a bit creative, you can find ways to make a little additional cash on the side. Even if it isn't a lot, as a student, a little can certainly go a long way.

School contests

Be sure to check out various contests being held at your college or university because most of them offer cash, gift cards or other prizes. For example, at Toronto's Humber College, students can win cash just for sending in a short video of themselves. Does your school offer something similar? Find out.

Write for the school newspaper

If you have a passion for writing and reporting school events, then writing for the school newspaper is an excellent way to make some money on the side. Some school newspapers also offer prizes to students just for sending in their submissions, whether it's an opinion piece, some artwork or even a poem. Contributing content not only helps you earn, it may also help you grow a professional network. You can also try out other freelance work such as photography or web design.

Be a website tester

Many companies pay people just to come and test their websites before they are launched or to offer feedback that's used to tweak and improve the sites. Testers are tasked with navigating the website at hand, while a "screen and audio recorder" takes note of your clicks, keyboard strokes and personal comments as you test the website for 15 minutes. For each website tested, you can earn approximately $10. Don't worry, your actual face is not recorded — there is no webcam.

Melanie Murchison will finish her degree abroad in August 2015. CONTRIBUTED

For Melanie Murchison, a learning experience abroad led to a hunger for more.

While studying law at the University of Winnipeg, she enrolled in a course called Sites of the Ancient World, which involved a three-week trip to Greece.

"I've always wanted to travel and after getting my first opportunity I knew I wanted to do more of it," Melanie says. "It seemed like the best idea was to combine wanting to travel with getting more education."

She chose to complete a PhD in Law at Queen's University Belfast — and says she couldn't be enjoying herself more.

Getting started

There are a lot of destinations where you can study abroad, so Melanie focused on identifying the most suitable candidates. "Since I don't speak any second languages, I knew I would need to do my schooling in an English-speaking country," she says.

When it came to choosing a destination, inside information came in handy — many of Melanie's family members had visited or lived in the U.K.

She turned her attention to researching programs in her field. "After communicating with potential supervisors, I wound up applying to three universities," Melanie explains. "After being accepted, I researched the financial aspects of the degree more thoroughly and had to decide where I thought I'd get the best supervision and support."

She travelled to Queen's University Belfast in September 2012.

Learning and growing

Melanie says that living abroad has offered her some unique career-building experience, working as a teaching assistant in criminal law and as a legal assistant at a local firm, Herbert Smith Freehills.

- "Doing my PhD in the U.K. has afforded me opportunities to teach in a different country to students doing a different type of law degree than the ones back home," she explains. "It has increased my skill set and made me more versatile."

The right fit

Melanie admits that she suffered a little homesickness at first, but kept this at bay by fostering a cat and keeping in touch with family and friends online. She also benefitted from some familiar two-legged company.

"After finishing the first year of my PhD, my best friend from Canada flew over to Europe and we backpacked together through six countries for four weeks," she says.

Slow-Cooked Lasagna. Prep this before you leave for work and come home to a delicious meal that just needs a salad

DINNER EXPRESS
Emily Richards
food@metronews.ca

This recipe makes eight servings. HEALTH CANADA

Let your slow cooker do the work and come home to this easy, heartwarming Simple Slow-Cooked Lasagna.

Swap in other greens or cooked vegetables to change things up.

This recipe works best in an oval- or rectangle-shaped slow cooker. If you're using a round slow cooker, you may need to break up the lasagna sheets a bit more.

Ingredients

- 227 g (8 oz) extra lean ground beef
- 1 onion, finely chopped
- 3 cloves garlic, minced
- 10 ml (2 tsp) dried oregano
- 1 ml (1/4 tsp) hot pepper flakes
- 1 jar (700 ml) tomato passata
- 250 ml (1 cup) water
- 1 tub (475 g) 1 % cottage or light ricotta cheese
- 1 pkg (142 g/5 oz) baby spinach, chopped
- 60 ml (1/4 cup) chopped fresh basil or parsley
- 30 ml (2 tbsp) grated Parmesan cheese
- 10 whole wheat or regular lasagna noodles
- 125 ml (1/2 cup) shredded part skim mozzarella

1. Lightly spray inside of slow cooker with cooking spray.

2. In nonstick skillet, brown beef, breaking up with spoon. Scrape out beef into a colander and let drain. Wipe out skillet and return to medium heat; cook beef, onion, garlic, oregano and hot pepper flakes 5 minutes or until softened. Add passata and water and remove from heat.

3. In a bowl, stir together ricotta cheese, spinach, basil and Parmesan cheese.

4. Spread some of the meat sauce over bottom of slow cooker. Lay lasagna noodles in a single layer, breaking as necessary to fit. Top with one quarter of the sauce and one third of the cheese mixture. Repeat layers twice ending with meat sauce on top. Cover and cook on Low for 6 to 8 hours or on High for 3 to 4 hours. About 15 minutes before serving lasagna, sprinkle mozzarella over top, cover and let cook on Low until melted. CHECK OUT THE HEALTHYCANADIANS.GC.CA WEBSITE FOR MORE WINTER RECIPES, PERFECT FOR DINNER AND MORE

Snowstorm no match for Riddle's twists

Ski halfpipe. Alberta freestyle skier conquers challenging conditions to win silver medal in Olympic debut of competition

A big blast of winter weather finally arrived at the Sochi Games on Tuesday night, dumping a big helping of thick snow just in time for the Olympic debut of the men's ski halfpipe competition.

The challenging conditions didn't faze Canada's Mike Riddle at all. The veteran freestyle skier stuck with his plan to unveil a new combination for his final run and it helped him win a silver medal.

"I managed to link together some tricks that I haven't done before," Riddle said. "I couldn't be happier with the result."

Riddle hit back-to-back double cork 1260's for the first time — three and-a-half rotations with two twists per trick — and it was enough to wow the judges at Rosa Khutor Extreme Park. The rest of his run was clean and it earned him a score of 90.60 points.

"Just to be here is unbelievable and then to get a medal — I'm speechless," he said.

American David Wise took the gold with a total of 92.00 and Kevin Rolland of France won bronze with 88.60 points. Calgary's Noah Bowman finished fifth while Justin Dorey of Vernon, B.C., missed jumps in both his final runs and ended up 12th.

Riddle won a world title in 2011 and took the overall World Cup crown last season.

"I did have more in the arsenal that I wanted to bring out but conditions made it kind of impossible to maintain speed," he said.

Riddle had reached the top 10 in his last 12 competitions entering the Games. He was sixth after a mediocre first run.

"You had to land really high on the transitions to be able to maintain speed for your next trick in order to link together your run," he said. "So if you weren't perfect, you were done, basically. Every trick had to be pretty much perfect."

Remembering Sarah Burke

Ski halfpipe was making its Olympic debut thanks in part to the efforts of Canada's Sarah Burke, who died in a training accident in 2012.

- "This Olympics for me is definitely bittersweet," Mike Riddle said. "It's awesome to be here but I know that she should be here too. She's been on my mind a lot this week."

Canadians find silver lining on short track

Canadians Marianne St-Gelais, left, Valérie Maltais, Jessica Hewitt and Marie-Ève Drolet won the silver medal in the women's 3,000-metre short track speedskating relay on Tuesday in Sochi. RICHARD LAUTENS/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

It was a bittersweet day for Canada's Olympic short-track speedskating team.

Gold-medal hopeful Charles Hamelin crashed out of the 500-metre heats on Tuesday, but within the hour Canada's women's 3,000-metre relay team won a silver medal.

"We feel great. We are really happy to have got the silver medal," said speedskater Jessica Hewitt. "I have never been on an (Olympic) podium before and we have worked very hard for this."

South Korea won gold in the women's relay with a time of four minutes 9.498 seconds, followed closely by China. However, the Chinese were disqualified because their skaters did not immediately leave the track after passing off to their teammates.

That bumped the Canadian team of Marie-Ève Drolet, Hewitt, Valérie Maltais and Marianne St-Gelais up from third place. Canada's final time was 4:10.641.

"We tried a different strategy here; making the exchange on different corners, so it got a little messy at times but we did well and then it just so happened that China were disqualified so we got the silver," said Hewitt. "We tried to put our best foot forward and to be there at the end of the race."

‘We just need one more than the other team’

Style points don’t count.
Canada still adjusting to big ice, but winning is the bottom line

Sidney Crosby talks with Canada’s starting goalie, Carey Price, during practice on Tuesday in Sochi. Asked about Olympic pressure Tuesday, Price replied: “I live inside a bubble anyway. I don’t get into too much about what anybody has to say, really.” NATHAN DENETTE/THE CANADIAN PRESS

No matter which forwards Team Canada dresses for its quarter-final, they’ve combined to score well over 300 goals in the NHL this season.

No team in Sochi features that kind of depth, and yet one concern going into Wednesday’s game against Latvia is a lack of offence up front. As this becomes a single-elimination tournament, Canada doesn’t need 300 goals.

“We just need one more than the other team,” Babcock said.

Getting that one big, important goal could make or break Canada moving forward. As the game against Finland showed, offence can be tough to come by on the international ice, especially against well-structured European opponents.

Finding a way to get to the middle of the ice and closer to the net was a major emphasis in practice Tuesday and could be the difference between reaching the semifinals and going home early.

“You watch our games and we’ve been on the outside a lot,” said winger Corey Perry, who will have a new linemate in Jamie Benn between him and Ryan Getzlaf. “To get shots to the net, to get second opportunities, that’s what the three of us are going to do.”

For all the talk about the big ice in advance of Sochi, it has made a difference — but not the way some figured.

Just because there’s more space doesn’t necessarily mean there’s more room to get creative offensively.

The Canadians scored six goals against Austria after scoring three in the opener against Norway, but it was against Finland where they learned a lesson. Holding onto the puck in the offensive zone paved the way for plenty of shots, but it was like a basketball team trying to shoot just from the outside. With a rink that’s 15 feet wider, it’s much more difficult to get quality scoring chances.

“You’re a long ways from the net when you’re hanging out on the wall,” said Jeff Carter. “We talked about that and maybe trying to shrink the ice a little bit ... just kind of make it feel more like an NHL-size rink.” THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

IIHF’s Fasel assures Women’s game safe

Amid concerns about competitive imbalance between Canada and the U.S. and the rest of the countries involved, IIHF president Rene Fasel guaranteed Tuesday women’s hockey would not be taken out of the Olympics.

It came after NHL commissioner Gary Bettman said he would be “distressed” to see that happen.

“That will never happen,” Fasel said. “I can guarantee that will never happen.” THE CANADIAN PRESS

Edwards hangs 'em up with his head held high

CFL. Bombers all-time receiving great's mind said 'go' but body 'no'

He wasn't pushed by the Winnipeg Blue Bombers and thinks he could still play but, at nearly 35 years of age, veteran CFL all-star receiver Terrence Edwards says his body has been giving him messages that the time is right to retire.

"My body has been starting to tell me that my career has been coming to an end," the soft-spoken Georgia native said Tuesday from his home in Atlanta.

He wanted to dispel any suggestions he was being pushed, after musing earlier this year that he might return for a season or two and said he was keeping another promise, to retire from football in a Bomber uniform.

The Bombers praised him as one of their greats and his numbers back that up. He sits fourth on the all-time team list for receiving yards at 7,200, produced five 1,000-yard-plus seasons and 24 100-yard-plus games, second only to Milt Stegall in that regard among Bombers receivers.

He was a league all-star twice and a divisional all-star three times.

"Terrence will retire today as one of the best receivers in the history of this franchise," said general manager Kyle Walters in a statement.

"He was a leader of the club's offence for many years and players like him simply do not come along every day."

Deep impact

As a Bomber, Edwards never gained under 500 receiving yards in a season

- Solid numbers Despite injuries in 2013 he pushed his career totals to 508 catches for 7,637 yards and 47 touchdowns.
- Bombers' debut After a brief try in the NFL with the Falcons in 2003 and then two seasons with the Alouettes, his debut with the Bombers in 2007 saw him record 1,280 yards.

He also mentioned Tuesday what went on last year in the Bomber locker room but wouldn't go into any details. It was not a happy place to be, as the team struggled and finished tied for their worst season in the 18-game CFL at 3-15.

But injuries were certainly a factor in his decision, agreed Edwards.

He had off-season surgery to repair an injured foot that was the most serious problem he faced in 2013, although he also missed a couple of games due to an injured shoulder. Also nagging at him, he confessed, is the fact that none were contact injuries.

He says he wants to be able to run around with his two young sons without having to take pain killers.

"That was also in my decision-making process."

CFL. Stampeders name Mueller to coaching staff

The Calgary Stampeders have added Marc Mueller to the coaching staff as a defensive assistant, filling their coaching roster.

Mueller is the grandson of the late Ron Lancaster, the Hall-of-Fame quarterback and longtime head coach in the CFL.

Last season, Mueller was quarterbacks coach of the University of Regina Rams, his alma mater.

Under the 24-year-old Regina native's guidance, the Rams led Canada West in passing offence with 359.4 yards per game.

The Stampeders have already hired Rich Stubler as defensive co-ordinator and Pat DelMonaco as offensive line coach. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Redblacks add some sure hands

The Ottawa Redblacks have added veteran receivers Aaron Hargreaves and Kierrie Johnson to their roster.

Hargreaves began his career in 2008 with the Winnipeg Blue Bombers and has played with the Edmonton Eskimos and last season with the Saskatchewan Roughriders.

Johnson, an import, began his CFL career in 2011 with the B.C. Lions before also joining Saskatchewan prior to last season.

Hargreaves has 56 career catches for 548 yards in the CFL and Johnson caught 34 passes for 512 yards and one touchdown in two seasons for the Lions. He also ran the ball 14 times for 76 yards in two seasons with B.C. and returned kicks.

MLB. Morrow takes fall for Jays' mound of garbage

As the Toronto Blue Jays got busy in 2014, pitcher Brandon Morrow offered a blunt assessment of what went wrong in a most disappointing 2013.

He began with the rotation.

"We pitched like garbage," Morrow said Monday at Toronto's first spring training workout.

"Starting pitchers were awful the first month, myself included. I mean, none of us were pitching like we wanted to, whether it was just bad luck that all five of us were going through that same time, or just putting pressure on ourselves," he said.

Morrow's season ended in May because of a forearm injury. The right-hander finished 2-3 with a 5.63 ERA.

R.A. Dickey and Mark Buehrle, both expected to be aces, barely wound up over .500. Josh Johnson went 2-8, got injured and now plays for San Diego. The Blue Jays were picked by many last year to be a World Series contender. But stumbled to a 74-88 record and finished last in the AL East.

After the 'cray, cray' Incognito Tweets his apology

Richie Incognito has changed his social media tone after details of a report by the National Football League were made public . JOEL AUERBACH/GETTY IMAGES

Dolphins offensive lineman Richie Incognito offered apologies to teammate Jonathan Martin, team owner Stephen Ross and investigator Ted Wells on Tuesday in the wake of the NFL-ordered report detailing a racially charged bullying scandal.

The report stated there was a "pattern of harassment" committed by Incognito and teammates John Jerry and Mike Pouncey that extended to two Dolphins linemen and an assistant trainer, all targets of vicious taunts and racist insults.

On his Twitter account, Incognito wrote, "I would like to send Jonathan my apologies as well. Until someone tells me different you are still my brother. No hard feelings :)"

He also apologized to Wells and Ross, saying "this (stuff) got cray, cray."

Incognito, 30, had closed his Twitter account for two days, but returned Monday night with a noticeably different tone, apologizing for "acting like a big baby."

The six-foot-three, 319-pound lineman said he wants to play football again. Incognito's contract with the Dolphins is about to expire, making him an unrestricted free agent.

It's unclear if Incognito will face punishment from the NFL. League spokesman Greg Aiello said on Monday that the NFL will comment "at the appropriate time" on Wells' report.

Incognito's tweets have taken on a vastly different tone than they did less than a week ago when he went on a rant that quickly went viral, blasting Martin and his representative Ken Zuckerman. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Honda hit hybrid high in 2014

Review. The last time Honda made a hybrid as impressive as the Accord it was over a decade ago with the original Insight

MALCOLM GUNN
wheelbasemedia.com

When a new hybrid sedan is called for, it appears that Honda is finally prepared to step up and deliver.

But instead of just one version of the Accord, there are two to consider: the Accord Plug-In that might possibly come to Canada (it's now available stateside); and another with less battery juice that you don't plug in.

Both hybrids can operate on battery or gasoline power independently or together in combination. It's the type of system commonly used in the Toyota Camry, Ford Fusion and Hyundai Sonata/Kia Optima duo.

Up to now for Honda, the electric motor operated only in tandem with the gas engine (referred to as a partial or mild hybrid). That makes for good, but not exactly leading-edge fuel economy, and Honda has come up short in challenging Toyota and others for its rightful share of the expanding hybrid market. Until now, that is (see factbox).

The secret to the Accord Hybrid is what Honda calls its Intelligent Multi-Mode Drive, or i-MMD. The system consists of two electric motors that are serviced by a lithium-ion battery pack plus a 141-horsepower 2.0-litre four-cylinder engine. One 166-horsepower electric motor serves as the Accord's primary powerplant and principally drives the front wheels, while the other motor acts as a fixed-ratio direct-drive continuously variable transmission (referred to by Honda as an e-CVT).

The gasoline engine functions exclusively as a generator for much of the time (sort of like the Chevrolet Volt) by supplying power to the drive motor as well as helping to recharge the batteries. But at cruising speeds above 70 km-h, it seamlessly connects to drive the front wheels, with or without electric-motor assist, depending on the load (accelerating and or heading uphill). In these instances, the system's 195 net total horsepower and 226 pound-feet of torque come into play.

The reason the Accord's city fuel economy is so impressive is that at speeds below 70 km-h, and under light-load conditions, only the electric drive motor is functioning to power the front wheels, or while the batteries have sufficient juice.

The entire drivetrain is cradled in a weight-saving all-aluminum sub-frame that replaces the steel and aluminum one installed in regular Accords. Additionally, an aluminum rear bumper beam replaces the steel version. The weight savings help partially offset the battery pack that's packaged behind the rear seat and reduces trunk space by about 25 per cent.

Accord Hybrid pricing begins at $31,300, including destination charges for the base model, which includes a wide assortment of content. The Touring trim level adds forward collision and lane departure warning safety systems, moonroof and a premium sound package along with LED headlights, adaptive cruise control (which keeps you following at a safe distance) and a navigation system.

Without question Honda has become a technological leader in gasoline-electric propulsion. Whether the company can trade on the Accord's already rousing success and convert new buyers would seem to be a foregone conclusion. Why? It's the hybrid that everyone knew Honda could build.

- Transmissions. Continuously variable

Design

Visually, the Accord Hybrid lacks the different nose that has been assigned to its Plug In counterpart, but it does feature a blue-accented grille, headlights and running lights, plus unique 17-inch wheels. Also, a trunk spoiler and special lower body panel improve vehicle aerodynamics (to help reduce fuel consumption)

Fuel economy

Honda claims it has leapfrogged the pack with a class-leading 3.7 l/100 km in the city and 4.0 on the highway. The top-selling Toyota Camry hybrid is rated at 4.5/4.9 and the Ford Fusion at 4.0/4.1. The Accord also beats out both the Hyundai Sonata and Kia Optima hybrid models that are rated at 5.4/4.9.

Hammound's latest design has him on cloud nine

Chrysler 200. Ontario native has struck gold twice in the cut-throat, highly competitive world of designing cars

AUTO PILOT
Mike Goetz
drive@metronews.ca

You think the Olympics are competitive? Try designing vehicles for a living.

First you got to get a job as a designer at a major automaker. It's a tight job market. There are more professional basketball players in the NBA than there are professional cars designers in the entire world. If you're lucky and good enough to get that gig, you're still not home free.

At Chrysler there can be as many as 15-plus exterior designers working on the same project, hoping to have their work carried to the next stage, says Jeff Hammound during our interview session at the Toronto auto show. "They never say you are the next designer of the car. Everybody sketches. Everybody puts designs on the wall."

But this Chrysler designer, a native of Guelph, Ontario, struck gold twice. One of his designs became the 2011 Jeep Grand Cherokee, and just recently, his work came to life in the form of the all-new 2014 Chrysler 200.

Not only was he the lead exterior designer of the 200, but during the design process he was promoted to design manager, to oversee all the vehicle's exterior design matters right through to production. "That was unusual. It doesn't always happen that way. It gave me a lot of ownership of the design. I obviously had a lot of help from upper management … But it really feels like my baby."

You don't run into car designers on the street everyday, especially Canadian ones, so Hammound agreed to quick Q&A about his profession.…

Typical day at the office?
"If we're sketching, you sketch all day long. A lot of us like to sketch after hours … If the vehicle is "in clay" you'll spend your day on floor, tapping lines, etc. You're in rough clothes because you get covered in clay. It's fun though. Then you're working with engineers and going to a lot of meetings."

Hardest part of the job?
"The time you spend trying to hold your design. That's the hardest part. That it stays true to its original design, through cost constraints, manufacturing constraints, engineering constraints. You really have to learn to balance your emotions. You need to learn to take criticism and not take it so personally, but you don't want to take the personal element out of it either, because it's the passion that makes a design successful."

Best advice to a car designer wanna-be?
"Definitely look at going to one of the more prestigious (design) schools, because you'll get exposure to the auto industry. The car companies come in and say, we like you, you and you. (Hammound went to Detroit's College for Creative Studies). Besides that, you really have to be passionate. It's very competitive and you'll be putting in long hours."

Dream assignment?
"As most designers would say — a super car. Few restrictions and more about what can you do to make it as ostentatious as possible. The proportions are also wide and long — makes for a really nice canvas."

The latest generation C-Class entered the market for model-year 2008 with new styling, more power and technology.

The entry-level Mercedes sedan in North America, standard models initially offered a range of V6 engines with no less than 201 horsepower, and up to 300-plus horsepower, depending on the model selected. Look for automatic transmissions and available All Wheel Drive, as designated by the '4Matic' badge. Rear wheel drive was standard.

Later in this model's life, a coupe variant joined the lineup, as did a 1.8 litre turbocharged four-cylinder base engine. Feature content included premium audio, push-button start, climate-controlled leather seats, xenon lights, navigation, Bluetooth and plenty more. Key competitors included the Lexus IS, BMW 3 Series and Audi A4.

Test drive

Start your test drive noting the condition of the C-Class's tires and brakes, as some owners have reported premature wear of these components. Sit with the vehicle in 'PARK' and turn the steering wheel fully from one side to the other, quickly, a few times. Any 'knocking' sound from beneath the vehicle in the process could be the result of a faulty or worn-out bushing in the steering system. Not a major issue, but one that should be addressed. Hard shifting or check-engine lights are likely caused by faulty sensors, though they could indicate transmission or engine trouble. In any case, be sure to have a mechanic 'scan' the mode's computer brain to investigate any issues or warning lights or messages. Though largely inconsequential, numerous owners have reported issues with the newer 7-speed automatic transmission—meaning that the older and more proven 5-speed unit may be a better choice if you're not opting for extended powertrain warranty coverage. Trouble signs in a model with the 7-speed automatic may include jerky shifting, especially at speed or just after overtaking another vehicle at full throttle. Test-drivers are advised to be sure they confirm proper operation from the stereo system and Bluetooth system, as well as all power seat adjustments, door locks, windows and the sunroof.

What owners like

Owners report stable handling, an opulent cabin, a great up-level stereo system and even good fuel mileage—especially with the 7-speed automatic that was added mid-cycle. Easy-to-use technology and styling rounded out the package.

What owners dislike

Complaints include noisy power seat adjustment, sometimes-noisy brakes, limited rear-seat headroom for taller passengers and the awkward placement of some of the controls around the steering wheel.

The verdict

The majority of owners of this generation of C-Class report minor issues, if any at all. A healthy, properly-maintained unit free of trouble signs, or one from a Certified Pre Owned program with extra warranty, should deliver plenty of worry-free luxury driving.

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
You will receive advice from all directions today, making it difficult to work out who is talking sense. Maybe you should shut yourself away for an hour or two and come to your own conclusions.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
You would be wise to keep your cash in your pocket today because if you make one wrong move, you may have to make several more to cover it up and before you know what's happening it will be costing you a fortune.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
It will pay you to keep a low profile and wait for the effects of today's Mercury-Saturn alignment to pass. That applies to all areas of your life but especially to your work.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
You may want to give voice to your feelings today but is that really such a good idea? The planets warn you won't do your cause much good if you let your resentments out for everyone to see.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
Steer clear of people who seem to enjoy talking about their worries. It may make them feel good to feel bad but it will spoil what might otherwise be a marvelous day.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Someone who is jealous of your popularity will make life tough for you today but they are unlikely to succeed. Let the negativity go over your head. It'll annoy them. Good.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
You will have to tell a little white lie today, the kind that keeps a friend from getting into serious trouble. A few days from now, when they realize what you did, they will thank you profusely.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Avoid quick fixes and dubious schemes today because they will cost you money. Anyone who approaches you with any of those once-in-a-lifetime, just-can't-lose proposals must be shown the door.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
You must control your temper today. That may be easier said than done but it must be done or what starts as a minor dispute could quickly get out of hand. Avoid people who like to fight.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
If you make a promise today you will have to keep, so think carefully before making a commitment. With Mercury, planet of communication, under lots of pressure you should keep your mouth shut.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
What you are worrying about is not worth the time. A few days from now, you will look back and wonder how you could have gotten so worked up about something so trivial.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
The Sun is moving through your sign and you're feeling on top of the world but today's Mercury-Saturn link could dampen your mood with negative news. SALLY BROMPTON
